Death, But No Taxes: A View of Estate Planning without Considering the Federal Estate Tax

Chang H. Chae
Hoffman, Sabban & Watenmaker

Benjamin Franklin once said that "In this world nothing can be said to be certain, except death and taxes." However, under the Tax Relief, Unemployment Insurance Reauthorization, and Job Creation Act of 2010, which raised the Federal estate tax exemption to $5 million and gave us portability, many reasonably wealthy estate planning clients will not have their estates subject to Federal estate taxes. It is also possible that the Federal estate tax will be repealed entirely. This presentation will explore non-tax issues related to estate planning and discuss why estate planners may now have greater freedom to creatively plan for their clients without being bound by traditional planning techniques that were designed to save on estate taxes. Now, estate planners may emphasize income tax, property tax, creditor protection, and Medicaid planning considerations.

Many of the most contentious disputes erupt into or occur in the middle of conservatorships. These pitched battles can devolve into the functional equivalent of pre-death will contests. This session will consider aspects of handling litigation of conservatorship disputes, including various claims and defenses that can be raised, the viability of claims for elder abuse in conservatorship proceedings, and using substituted judgment proceedings to resolve disputes.

One of the difficult problems facing estate planning counsel and family law attorneys is knowing how and in what manner the laws of their disciplines are affected by the laws of the other practice area. Both areas of the law are often involved in sophisticated resolution of complex issues ranging from prenuptial agreements to marital dissolutions. This session is designed to help you provide competent guidance and advice in these crossover areas of the law.
